On the afternoon of 2 February 2016, Mr Athen Barnaby rescued a man from a burning truck at Nerang, Queensland.

Mr Barnaby was travelling on the Gold Coast Highway when he witnessed a large truck swerve, slide into the guard rail, and jack-knife. The truck was tilted on its side, taking up three lanes of the highway with fire and smoke billowing from the engine area.

Dressed only in light clothing and thongs he left his own vehicle and ran towards the burning truck, just as the driver was trying to climb out of the cabin via a window. Due to his injuries and the smoke, the driver was unable to move any further.

Mr Barnaby climbed up onto the cabin to reach the semi-conscious driver, who was yelling in pain. He grabbed the driver by the arms and lifted him out from the window, freeing his injured legs.

Sergeant Kyle Craig BATES, Queensland Police Service

On the evening of 8 March 1990, Sergeant Kyle Bates, (then Constable Bates), was involved in the rescue of two men from a vessel off Byron Bay, New South Wales.

Sergeant Bates, and two other members of Queensland Police, launched police rescue catamaran the 'D.W. Wrembeck', to go to the assistance of two men on a vessel located off Byron Bay. The police also sought the assistance of the 'Douglas Cairns', a larger catamaran crewed by members of the Air Sea Rescue Service.

For approximately four hours the rescue catamarans battled rough seas and gale force winds. The 'Douglas Cairns' became incapacitated, leaving the 'D.W. Wrembeck' to continue on as the weather conditions worsened.

At 2:00am the stricken vessel was located with two men aboard. Despite debris in the water from the damaged craft, the police vessel was navigated close enough to float a life-ring to one of the men who was then pulled aboard. The second man drifted away in the huge sea but was eventually located and pulled aboard.

As the police vessel made its return it was continuously pounded by huge waves which caused breaks to the rigging and threatened the crew's ability to maintain communications and operate the engines.

By his actions, Sergeant Bates displayed considerable bravery.

On the morning of 28 January 2013, Mr Scott Hunter, a Queensland Fire and Emergency Services fire fighter, assisted in the rescue of people trapped by floodwaters in North Bundaberg, Queensland.

Mr Hunter was tasked with assessing the rescue of about 80 people who had become stranded at a service station in North Bundaberg. The streets surrounding the service station were inundated with fast flowing water as a result of heavy rains.

Mr Hunter realised that the boat he was in was unsuitable for the task so enlisted the assistance of people who were nearby who had a flat bottomed boat. An anchor rope was tied to a power pole and then threaded through the boat's carry handles allowing the vessel to be used as a punt.

With no swift water training, Mr Hunter entered the waist high swirling water, shuffling against the rapids to reach the stranded victims. He prioritised the victims, rescuing the elderly and children first, and ferried them on the punt to a nearby evacuation area.

With the evacuation fully complete, Mr Hunter, without ropes or equipment, re-entered the fast flowing water to check buildings on the other side of the street for further stranded people.

On the afternoon of Saturday 19 December 2015, Mr Brendan Walker, an off-duty Paramedic and Country Fire Authority volunteer, went to the assistance of people at a property in the path of a bushfire at Scotsburn in Victoria.

Mr Walker became aware that assistance was needed at a nearby property in danger from a bushfire. He drove to the property with a 600 litre tank of water and pump on the back of his 4WD.
