A MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA

Every day, all around the country, there are ordinary Australians doing extraordinary things in their communities. The sum of these often selfless and generous actions enriches our society.

Honours and Awards recipients come from all walks of life and each had an indelible, remarkable impact in our community at the local, national or international level.

Recipients of Meritorious awards work tirelessly in roles that are critical to our community and are held in high esteem by all Australians. They make an important impact and deserve to be celebrated.

On behalf of all Australians, I congratulate and thank all recipients of honours and awards for their outstanding contribution to our nation. They are a source of inspiration to us all and have helped make Australia the great country that it is.

Our honours system belongs to all of us. In addition to Meritorious awards, the system includes, through the Order of Australia, the opportunity for all of us to have a say in the type of service and achievement that is celebrated.

If you know of someone in your community who has made Australia a better place in which to live and work, I encourage you to consider nominating them. For details on how to nominate, visit www.gg.gov.au.

INTRODUCTION

Meritorious awards recognise outstanding and distinguished service by public servants, members of an Australian police force, fire, ambulance, corrections, intelligence or emergency service, or in support of outstanding work with an Australian Antarctic expedition.

The awards were created to recognise those occupations that provide services for the community, particularly in times of emergency or disaster. Historically nominees are people whose current service is inherently more hazardous than most other occupations. These awards recognise individuals who have performed service at a level above that which would be expected of someone in their position, or have made significant achievements.

The meritorious awards are made up of medals recommended by federal, state and territory ministers, to recognise members of particular services for their outstanding or distinguished achievements. Upon receipt of recommendations, the Australian Honours and Awards Secretariat makes checks for adherence to the governing documents, organises sounding, and presents them to the Governor-General. If approved, the Secretariat prepares material for publication in the relevant honours list. The Secretariat is also responsible for preparation and despatch of warrants (a document certifying the award) and insignia (the medal) to the relevant Government House, for investiture.

The suite of Meritorious Awards consists of the following:

- The Public Service Medal (PSM) was established on 18 October 1989 to recognise public service employees, including those of the Australian Government and state, territory and local governments who have given outstanding public service.
- The Australian Police Medal (APM) was established on 3 March 1986. The medal recognises distinguished service by a member of an Australian police force.
- The Australian Fire Service Medal (AFSM) was established on 12 April 1988. The medal recognises distinguished service by a member of an Australian fire service. It is awarded to paid and volunteer members.
- The Ambulance Service Medal (ASM) was established on 7 July 1999. The medal recognises distinguished service as a member of an Australian ambulance service.

- The Emergency Services Medal (ESM) was established on 7 July 1999. The medal recognises distinguished service as a member of an Australian emergency service and people who are involved in emergency management, training or education.
 - The Australian Corrections Medal (ACM) was established on 19 June 2017. The medal recognises distinguished service by an operational member of Australian state or territory civilian corrections service for adults.
 - The Australian Intelligence Medal (AIM) was established on 24 January 2020. The medal recognises distinguished service by a member of the National Intelligence Community.
 - The Australian Antarctic Medal (AAM) was established on 2 June 1987. Previously called the Antarctic Medal, it is awarded for outstanding service in scientific research or exploration, or in support of such work, in the course of, or in connection with an Australian Antarctic expedition.

The Governor-General makes these awards on the recommendation of the responsible Ministers. Members of the public cannot nominate someone for a meritorious award. These awards are normally set for announcement on Australian Day (January 26) and The King's Birthday (the second Monday in June), with the exception of the Australian Antarctic Medal which is announced on 21 June in a special Midwinter's Day honours list.

Upon publication of their award, recipients are entitled to have the appropriate post nominals placed after their names on all occasions when the use of such letters is customary.

INFORMATION ABOUT AWARDS

About the Australian honours system

The Australian honours system recognises the outstanding service and contributions of Australians.

Recipients come from across the country and from all walks of life. While some are well-known, the majority are unsung heroes. While typically they haven't sought thanks or recognition, they deserve both. The Australian honours system gives the nation a chance to celebrate and acknowledge those who work tirelessly to improve local communities and to make Australia a better place.

Collectively, they showcase the best attributes of Australians – as His Excellency General the Honourable David Hurley AC DSC (Retd) has said:

"Collectively, they speak to who we are as a nation. There are countless examples of selflessness, commitment and dedication. There is diversity and there are examples of exceptional achievement in almost every field imaginable."

The broad groups of awards are meritorious, bravery and gallantry, long service and good conduct, operational service, and commemoration.

The Australian honours system is administered by the Australian Honours and Awards Secretariat which forms part of the Office of the Official Secretary to the Governor-General.

Responsibility for honours policy matters rests with the Honours and Symbols Branch of the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet.

History of the Australian honours system

The Australian honours system formally began on 14 February 1975 with the introduction of the Order of Australia, the Australian Bravery Decorations, and the National Medal.

The Order of Australia is a multi-level "society of honour", recognising the merit of the service and achievements of its individual members. The Australian Bravery Decorations recognise individual or group acts of bravery. The National Medal is a long service and good conduct medal, awarded to members of recognised government and voluntary organisations which aid people and property in times of crisis.

Although the system formally began in 1975, uniquely Australian medals existed before then. Service during World War II by Australians was recognised through the Australia Service Medal 1939-45; and a Vietnam Medal was also established, in 1968.

Both medals were created within the British Imperial honours system then in use, but could only be awarded for service by members of Australian armed forces. Even after 1975, the Australian and British systems temporarily operated in parallel. Imperial honours were awarded less often as time went on, until 1992, when it was agreed with Queen Elizabeth II that Australian governments would no longer recommend such awards.

The Sovereign still establishes Australian awards through Letters Patent, exercising the Royal prerogative. However, in most cases the Governor-General approves recommendations for appointments or awards.

Since 1975, additional Australian awards have been established to enable the recognition of various types of service and achievements to continue while the British counterpart awards were phased out. The Australian honours system has developed to a point at which it is truly unique, and tailored to Australia's needs.

About Letters Patent, Regulations, Determinations, and Wearing

The Letters Patent approved by The Sovereign institutes the medal and ordains that the medal is governed by the Regulations Governing the Award. These Regulations, approved by The Sovereign, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, set out the terms and conditions of an award, and states that the design, and manner of wearing, of the medal is determined by the Governor-General.

The Determination informs the design of the medal, its associated insignia, and that the order of wearing is in accordance with The Order of Wearing of Australian Honours and Awards and the manner of wearing is in accordance with the Guide to the Wearing of Insignia. This guide assists recipients on appropriate wearing, outlining the manner in which insignia are worn and wearing in regard to different types of dress. The design of the medal and associated insignia must be in accordance with the relevant technical specifications.

The placement of the medal is approved by The Sovereign, and the Order of Wearing of Australian Honours and Awards is the notification by the Governor-General of the positioning of all awards in the Australian honours system.

These instruments collectively inform the rules and conditions associated with the Meritorious awards.

Frequently Asked Questions

How to nominate

The Governor-General issues meritorious awards on the recommendation of the responsible Ministers. Members of the public cannot nominate someone for a meritorious award. For further information see the award information page for each individual awards nomination process.

Order of wear

Each medal is worn and approved by The Sovereign in accordance with The Order of Wearing of Australian Honours and Awards.

Care of medals

To ensure medals remain in good condition it is important to care for them. Always try to handle medals and components with cotton gloves or avoid direct contact with hands and fingers, as they can transfer acid onto medal surfaces.

Only clean/polish your medal, miniature medal and lapel badge with the polishing cloth supplied, or a leather chamois cloth. We do not recommend the use of any liquids, chemicals, abrasives or commercial cleaning agents on any metal components.

It is recommended that after use all medal components are cleaned, buffed and placed back into the original presentation box and stored in a dry area. Additional silica gel sachets may also be placed in the box for insignia stored in humid or coastal areas.

Ordering replica and replacement insignia or additional items

Replica Insignia

PUBLIC SERVICE MEDAL

The Award

The Public Service Medal (PSM) is part of the Australian honours system. It recognises employees of the Australian Government and state, territory and local governments who have given outstanding service.

Outstanding service could be shown through:

- service excellence to the public, or to external or internal clients;
- innovation in program, project or policy development;
- leadership, including as a member of a team; or
- the achievement of more efficient processes, improved productivity or better service delivery.

With the exception of recognition for COVID-19 related service, only 100 awards of the PSM can be made in any calendar year. Of these, up to 30 can be awarded to employees of Australian Government agencies and the remainder are awarded by the states and territories as follows: NSW (22); VIC (17); QLD (11); WA (6); SA (6); TAS (3); ACT (3); and NT (2).

Individuals recognised for their contribution, service or achievement relating to COVID-19 are featured on a dedicated COVID-19 honours roll. This recognition is for exceptional individuals who have gone above and beyond in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Recipients of the PSM are entitled to use the post-nominal 'PSM' after their name to show that their outstanding service has been formally recognised.

A person may only receive the Public Service Medal once.

History

There is a long tradition in Commonwealth nations of recognising employees for outstanding public service. Previously, members of the Australian Public Service were rewarded through the Imperial Honours system with awards similar to their British counterparts. This ceased in 1975 when the Order of Australia was established.

The Australian Public Service Medal was established on 18 October 1989 by Letters Patent and is usually awarded twice a year by the Governor-General. On 23 December 2021, amendments to the Public Service Medal Regulations were approved by Queen Elizabeth II enabling the recognition of COVID-19 related service above the annual quotas.

Eligibility

Employees of the Australian Government and state, territory and local governments are eligible for the PSM, except for certain members of the Defence Force and other uniformed services (police, fire, ambulance and emergency services) who are eligible for comparable awards¹. The PSM is open to all levels of the public service. Past awards have been made across a broad range of government services and locations. A person who has received a PSM and gives further distinguished service may be nominated subsequently for an award in the Order of Australia. Similarly, a person who has received an award in the Order of Australia is not excluded from receiving a PSM if the nomination relates to different service than that used for the Order of Australia. If the PSM nomination is for similar service, at least five years should elapse between the announcement of awards, in accordance with established honours convention.

A person does not have to be an Australian citizen to be awarded the PSM. However, if the nominated person is not an Australian citizen, the Australian Government, in accordance with honours convention, may need to seek the agreement of the government of the country of citizenship before the award can be made.

Awards of the PSM may be made to former public servants for nominations submitted within 12 months of ceased service. Nominations must be submitted for public servants whilst living.

Nominating

The Public Service Medal is usually awarded twice a year by the Governor-General.

The various Commonwealth, state and territory Public Service Medal committees meet twice a year to consider nominations for the honours lists announced in January and June. After considering the nominations, committees recommend a list of proposed recipients to the Minister or Premier, who then makes a recommendation to the Governor-General who has the authority to approve awards.

All nominations must be endorsed by the relevant Departmental Secretary or agency head.

Guidance can be found on the Department of Prime Minister and Cabinet website.

1. With regards to the suite of meritorious awards, it is possible to be awarded more than one type of meritorious award provided the award recognises different service, for example, PSM and an AAM.

- actions that exceed the requirements of normal duties of a member; and
- high level achievement in the performance of their duties.

With the exception of recognition for COVID-19 related service, the number that may be awarded is one medal for every 1 000, or part of 1 000, members of the Australian police force of the Commonwealth, State or Territory each calendar year; plus one additional award.

Individuals recognised for their contribution, service or achievement relating to COVID-19 are featured on a dedicated COVID-19 honours roll. This recognition is for exceptional individuals who have gone above and beyond in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Recipients of the APM are entitled to use the post-nominal 'APM' after their name to show that their distinguished service has been formally recognised.

A person may only receive the Australian Police Medal once.

History

The Australian Police Medal was established on 3 March 1986 by Letters Patent.

Prior to the creation of the Australian honours system members of Australian police forces were acknowledged by Imperial awards:

- Queen's Police Medal for Gallantry (awarded posthumously)
- Queen's Police Medal for Distinguished Service
- Police Long Service and Good Conduct Medal

In 1986 a distinctly Australian award, the Australian Police Medal, was created. The medal gives special recognition to members of Australian police forces for commendable service.

On 23 December 2021, amendments to the Australian Police Medal Regulations were approved by Queen Elizabeth II enabling the recognition of COVID-19 related service above the annual quotas.

Eligibility

The APM may be awarded to a member who has shown distinguished service when carrying out the primary functions of the organisation, particularly where the work has been inherently more hazardous than most other occupations.

Members who recently worked on the frontline for a prolonged period of time and had exposure to hazard in the service of the community, and who are now using their frontline experience to support others on the frontline, may also be eligible.

A person does not have to be an Australian citizen to be awarded the APM. A person's eligibility for the award is dependent on the conditions of employment with the organisation in which service was given. However, if the nominated person is not an Australian citizen, the Australian Government, in accordance with honours convention, may need to seek the agreement of the government of the country of citizenship before the award can be made.

Awards of the APM may be made to former serving members for nominations submitted within 12 months of ceased service. Nominations must be submitted for serving members whilst living.

Nominating

Nominations for the APM are submitted to a coordinating authority who consider the nominations and submit recommendations to the responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier.

The responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier submit the recommendations to the Governor-General who has the authority to approve awards.

The Australian Police Medal is usually awarded twice a year by the Governor-General.

Prior to 1988 distinguished service in the Australian Fire Service was recognised by two awards:

Members who recently worked on the frontline for a prolonged period of time and had exposure to hazard in the service of the community, and who are now using their frontline experience to support others on the frontline, may also be eligible.

A person does not have to be an Australian citizen to be awarded the AFSM. A person's eligibility for the award is dependent on the conditions of employment with the organisation in which service was given. However, if the nominated person is not an Australian citizen, the Australian Government, in accordance with honours convention, may need to seek the agreement of the government of the country of citizenship before the award can be made.

Awards of the AFSM may be made to former serving members for nominations submitted within 12 months of ceased service. Nominations must be submitted for serving members whilst living.

Nominating

Nominations for the AFSM are submitted to a coordinating authority who consider the nominations and submit recommendations to the responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier.

Distinguished service includes:

- achievement that has an enduring benefit for the organisation; and
- actions that exceed the requirements of normal duties of a member; and
- high level achievement in the performance of their duties.

With the exception of recognition for COVID-19 related service, the medal is awarded annually as follows:

- One medal for every 1000, or part of 1000, full-time permanent members of a State's ambulance service.
- One medal for every 5000, or part of 5000, part-time, volunteer or auxiliary members of a State's ambulance service.
- One additional medal to a full-time permanent member, part-time member, volunteer or auxiliary member.
- One medal may be awarded each year for ambulance members in each of the Australian Capital Territory, the Northern Territory and the combined external Territories.

Individuals recognised for their contribution, service or achievement relating to COVID-19 are featured on a dedicated COVID-19 honours roll. This recognition is for exceptional individuals who have gone above and beyond in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Recipients of the ASM are entitled to use the post-nominal 'ASM' after their name to show that their distinguished service has been formally recognised.

A person may only receive the Ambulance Service Medal once.

History

Along with the Emergency Services Medal, the Ambulance Service Medal was introduced into the Australian system of honours in 1999.

The Ambulance Services Medal was established on 7 July 1999 by Letters Patent.

On 23 December 2021, amendments to the Ambulance Service Medal Regulations were approved by Queen Elizabeth II enabling the recognition of COVID-19 related service above the annual quotas.

Eligibility

The ASM may be awarded to a member who has shown distinguished service when carrying out the primary functions of the organisation, particularly where the work has been inherently more hazardous than most other occupations.

Members who recently worked on the frontline for a prolonged period of time and had exposure to hazard in the service of the community, and who are now using their frontline experience to support others on the frontline, may also be eligible.

A person does not have to be an Australian citizen to be awarded the ASM. A person's eligibility for the award is dependent on the conditions of employment with the organisation in which service was given. However, if the nominated person is not an Australian citizen, the Australian Government, in accordance with honours convention, may need to seek the agreement of the government of the country of citizenship before the award can be made.

Awards of the ASM may be made to former serving members for nominations submitted within 12 months of ceased service. Nominations must be submitted for serving members whilst living.

Nominating

Nominations for the ASM are submitted to a coordinating authority who consider the nominations and submit recommendations to the responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier.

The responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier submit the recommendations to the Governor-General who has the authority to approve awards.

The Ambulance Service Medal is usually awarded twice a year by the Governor-General.

- achievement that has an enduring benefit for the organisation; and
- actions that exceed the requirements of normal duties of a member; and
- high level achievement in the performance of their duties.

With the exception of recognition for COVID-19 related service, the medal is awarded annually as follows:

- One medal for every 1000, or part of 1000, full-time equivalent members of a State or Territory's correctional service.
- One additional medal may be awarded for each State or Territory that has more than 1,000 full-time equivalent correctional service members.

Individuals recognised for their contribution, service or achievement relating to COVID-19 are featured on a dedicated COVID-19 honours roll. This recognition is for exceptional individuals who have gone above and beyond in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Recipients of the ACM are entitled to use the post-nominal 'ACM' after their name to show that their distinguished service has been formally recognised.

A person may only receive the Australian Corrections Medal once.

History

The Australian Corrections Medal was established on 19 June 2017 by Letters Patent.

On 23 December 2021, amendments to the Australian Corrections Medal Regulations were approved by Queen Elizabeth II enabling the recognition of COVID-19 related service above the annual quotas.

Eligibility

The ACM may be awarded to a member who has shown distinguished service when carrying out the primary functions of the organisation, particularly where the work has been inherently more hazardous than most other occupations.

Members who recently worked on the frontline for a prolonged period of time and had exposure to hazard in the service of the community, and who are now using their frontline experience to support others on the frontline, may also be eligible.

A person does not have to be an Australian citizen to be awarded the ACM. A person's eligibility for the award is dependent on the conditions of employment with the organisation in which service was given. However, if the nominated person is not an Australian citizen, the Australian Government, in accordance with honours convention, may need to seek the agreement of the government of the country of citizenship before the award can be made.

Awards of the ACM may be made to former serving members for nominations submitted within 12 months of ceased service. Nominations must be submitted for serving members whilst living.

Nominating

Nominations for the ACM are submitted to a coordinating authority who consider the nominations and submit recommendations to the responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier.

The responsible Commonwealth, State or Territory Minister or Premier submit the recommendations to the Governor-General who has the authority to approve awards.

The Australian Corrections Medal is usually awarded twice a year by the Governor-General.

AUSTRALIAN ANTARCTIC MEDAL

The Award

The Australian Antarctic Medal (AAM) is part of the Australian honours system. It recognises outstanding service in scientific research or exploration in connection with an Australian Antarctic expedition.

Recipients of the AAM are entitled to use the post-nominal 'AAM' after their name to show that their outstanding service has been formally recognised.

A clasp to the medal is awarded for further outstanding service.

History

Australia has been involved in scientific exploration of Antarctica since the expeditions led by Sir Douglas Mawson in 1911-1914. The Australian Antarctic Territory was declared in 1933.

The Australian Antarctic Medal was established on 2 June 1987 by Letters Patent. At this time, the Medal was known as the Antarctic Medal until the name was changed in 1997. The medal replaced the British Polar Medal and its variations which date back to 1857.

Eligibility

The AAM may be awarded to an Australian citizen or other person who has given outstanding service in scientific research or exploration, or in support of such work, in the course of, or in connection with, an Australian Antarctic expedition.

Except in exceptional circumstances, recipients of the medal have worked for 12 months or more in the Antarctic climate south of latitude 60° South or elsewhere in the Antarctic region where the rigours of Antarctic climate and terrain prevail.

The medal may be awarded to people who are not Australian citizens but have given outstanding support to Australia's Antarctic endeavours.

A person does not have to be an Australian citizen to be awarded the AAM. A person's eligibility for the award is dependent on the conditions of employment with the organisation in which service was given. However, if the nominated person is not an Australian citizen, the Australian Government, in accordance with honours convention, may need to seek the agreement of the government of the country of citizenship before the award can be made.

Awards of the AIM may be made to former serving members for nominations submitted within 12 months of ceased service. Nominations must be submitted for serving members whilst living.

Nominating

Nominations for the AAM are submitted to the Australian Government Minister responsible for the Antarctic Territory. The Minister submits their recommendations to the Governor-General who has the authority to approve awards.

The Australian Antarctic Medal is announced on 21 June in a special Midwinter's Day honours list as a day of traditional significance for Antarctic expeditioners.
