Dr James Howard BRADBURY, 118 Vasey Crescent, Campbell ACT 2612

For service to science as a plant biochemist, particularly through research and the development of a test kit to measure levels of cyanide in cassava and other food crops.

Founder and Coordinator, Cassava Cyanide Diseases Network (CCDN), since 2001. Cassava (tapioca) is the main food crop in much of the developing world, particularly in the poorest rural areas of Africa. The roots of the cassava plant contain cyanide which causes a permanent paralysis of the legs (called konzo), particularly in children. Dr Bradbury has been involved in the development and supply, free of charge, of simple kits used by health and agricultural workers in developing countries to measure the cyanide content of cassava roots. He has developed a simple method to remove cyanide from cassava flour, which should greatly reduce the incidence of konzo in Africa.

Editor, CCDN News.

Currently a Visiting Fellow, Division of Botany and Zoology, Australian National University; served as Reader in Chemistry prior to retirement.

Founding Coordinator, Asia Pacific Food Analysis Network (APFAN), 1989-1999; APFAN's aim is to provide developing countries with improved food safety and good nutrition; there are now 450 members from 30 countries.

Area Coordinator, Red Cross Calling, 1971-1996; also involved with other fundraising events including Embassy Open Days and international disaster appeals.

Founding Treasurer, Australian Fulbright Association, 1990-2005.
